Description This subject will examine ways in which literature and philosophy interact. It will consider the ways in which literature and philosophy offer important and different ways of thinking. And it will consider the differences between literature and philosophy. Literature will be understood to involve thinking through sensations, while philosophy will be understood to involve thinking through concepts. The subject will examine examples of interaction between literary texts and philosophical texts, considering how literary effects can inhabit philosophical texts and philosophical ideas can permeate literary texts. The subject will consider frequently occurring themes within both literature and philosophy, such as ethics (ways of living and acting).

Learning Outcomes

On successful completion of this subject, students should be able to:

1. demonstrate grounded theory for the way in which literature may generate ideas through emotions and sensations and the way philosophy generates ideas through concepts;
2. demonstrate an understanding of how philosophical thought differs from other kinds of thinking (science and art);
3. recognise the shared themes of philosophy and literature;
4. identify the ways in which philosophy offers important ways of thinking;
5. demonstrate how a knowledge of literature and philosophy might interact and to recognise the distinctions as well as the points of contact between literary and philosophical texts;
6. understand the ways in which literature and philosophy effect ways of thinking (outside their field); and
7. demonstrate knowledge of the effect of literature on language.
